

City of Iqaluit
1085 Mivvik Street
P.O. Box 460
Iqaluit, Nunavut
X0A 0H0

Public Service Announcement

Water, Trucked Services and Boil Water Advisory Update - Evening

February 5, 2023 – Iqaluit, Nunavut

Water has been restored to the Tammaativvik medical boarding home. As of now, all water mains are operational.

Public Works crews are currently checking and clearing problem areas in the sewer system, as a precautionary measure. They are also repairing two leaks in the piped water system. Please conserve water.

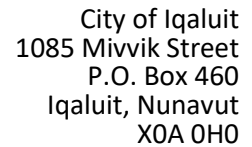

Iqaluit is now under a precautionary boil water advisory for only piped water customers. Starting tomorrow, both piped water service and trucked water service customers will be under the boil water order.

The boil water advisory for all residents will be lifted by Public Health following their tests. The City of Iqaluit will release a Public Service Announcement when the precautionary boil water advisory is lifted.

Trucked water services will resume normal operation starting Monday February 6.

Public Works crews would like to thank their Iqaluit neighbours and friends, who were kind enough to bring coffee to staff on a very cold day. Public Works would also like to thank Nunavut Excavating for their professionalism in helping the City return to regular water service.

If you live in a rental unit and still have no water, please contact your landlord to advise them of the issue so they can contact a local contractor to clear the line.

Media releases are available in Inuktitut, English and French at www.iqaluit.ca
Les communiqués de presse sont disponibles en inuktitut, en anglais et en français au www.iqaluit.ca